DIRECT EXAMINATION

BY MR. STRACHMAN:

Q. Dr. Brenman, what is your profession?

A. I'm a licensed psychologist.

Q. And where were you educated in that profession?

A. My doctorate and master's are from Harvard University School of Education.

Q. If you're a psychologist, why were you in the School of Education?

A. The School of Education has a Department of Human Development and Psychology where a lot of students who wish to do more clinical -- clinically related work go to school and receive their training there.

Q. And you have a master's degree as well from Harvard?

A. Right.

Q. And in what area of psychology do you --

A. In child psychology.

Q. You're a child psychologist?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us a little bit about your experience and where you've worked.

A. I did my training in the Boston area at the Franciscan Children's Hospital working with children with emotional and behavioral problems. I've done an

1 internship at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute working 2 with children and families of cancer patients and a 3 year at the Kennedy Memorial Hospital doing my clinical 4 internship also working with children with medical, 5 cognitive and emotional problems.

6 After graduation, I did a year of post-doctoral 7 training in the Department of Child and Family
8 Psychiatry at Rhode Island Hospital.

9 Q. Subsequently, you were employed as a psychologist?

10 A. Yes, I'm self-employed in private practice.

11 Q. Were you on the staff of Bradley Hospital?

12 A. I worked part time in the Outpatient Department at 13 Bradley for four years.

14 Q. Is that a child psychiatric hospital?

15 A. Yes, it's a total child hospital.

16 Q. And subsequent to working there, did you -- have 17 you worked in any other -- did you have any other jobs 18 as a psychologist other than your private practice?

19 A. I worked for Roger Williams Hospital running some 20 bereavement groups for the Hope Center for Life
21 Enhancement, running a group for men with prostate 22 cancer; and I work as a clinical consultant currently 23 with the Department of Human Services helping to run a 24 Medicaid program for disabled children.

25 Q. In front of you, do you have a copy of Exhibit

1 Number 15 -- excuse me, 17?

2 A. My resume.

3 Q. You prepared that?

4 A. Yes.

5 MR. STRACHMAN: I'd ask that that be marked as a 6 full exhibit.

7 THE COURT: It may be so marked.

8 MR. STRACHMAN: Thank you.

9 (Plaintiff's Exhibit 17 was admitted as a full 10 exhibit)

11 Q. And could you tell us, Doctor, about your 12 experience in the field of child psychology.

13 A. I began my training in 1986 working with children 14 with emotional and behavioral problems. One of the 15 areas of specialty that I've worked in is the whole 16 area of bereavement, death and grief work starting with 17 the work I did at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute 18 working with children with cancer and their families.

19 Q. Subsequent to that, do you have other experience 20 dealing with children as a child psychologist?

21 A. Well, my practice currently is about 50 to 60
22 percent working with children and adolescents.

23 Q. And have you dealt with people -- I think you told 24 us a little bit about grief and bereavement groups.

25 Have you dealt with children whose family has suffered

1 a trauma or children who have lost a parent?

2 A. That's one of the areas of specialty that I work
3 in. I get referrals from hospitals when there is a 4 parent with cancer or who has recently died; and I will 5 counsel the children, the family through the grief and 6 bereavement period.

7 I've worked with children from abusive homes in 8 helping them and the families deal with the emotional 9 consequences of those behaviors; and most recently I've 10 treated a family who's lost somebody in the September 11 11th attack.

12 Q. And have you dealt with, in your practice that 13 deals with adults, have you dealt with -- have you been 14 involved in the bereavement and grief field?

15 A. All the time, either through working with the 16 families where one of the parents has died from cancer 17 or some other terminal illness through running 18 bereavement groups for adults who have lost a loved one 19 in their families.

20 Q. You told us that you were involved in grief 21 counselling. Could you tell us what that entails, what 22 that means?

23 A. It means that at various points after a loss, I 24 help people to cope with the intense feelings that they 25 experience, natural feelings that they experience as a

1 result of a death or a loss that they experience. Very 2 often for children it's helping them to label their 3 feelings, helping them to express their feelings in 4 different ways, to normalize it, help them to explain 5 the grief process and provide a lot of support during 6 this period which can last up to a couple of years 7 after a death.

8 MR. STRACHMAN: Your Honor, I'd ask that 9 Dr. Brenman be qualified as both a child psychologist 10 and expert in grief counselling.

11 THE COURT: Granted.

12 MR. STRACHMAN: Thank you.

13 Q. Now, Dr. Brenman, did you have an opportunity to 14 meet with Dvir and Yishai Unger?

15 A. Yes, I did.

16 Q. And did you meet with the Dasberg family?

17 A. Yes, I did.

18 Q. And do you speak Hebrew, by the way?

19 A. Yes.

20 Q. Were you able to speak to them in Hebrew directly?

21 A. To the children I spoke directly in Hebrew and to 22 the grandparents in English.

23 Q. And did you speak to -- could you tell us what you 24 learned about how they're doing and how they're 25 functioning, specifically the children.

1 A. Sure. In my conversations with the children, it 2 was more superficial, how are you doing and how was the 3 trip in, a little bit about why they were here. I
4 didn't go into an in-depth assessment of them, but I
5 did with the grandparents. And I was able to observe 6 the interactions between the grandparents and the 7 grandchildren.

8 From what I could gather from the grandparents, 9 overall the children are doing quite well now. They're 10 in school, and they're doing well. They have positive 11 relationships with their grandparents and other members
12 of the family. They've got some friends. Socially 13 they seem to be doing fairly well as well.

14 There were a number of points, though, that I 15 picked up on that I did have some concerns about. For 16 the older boy, Dvir, who is eight years old, one of the 17 things that I observed and that the grandmother also 18 attested to was his overprotectiveness of his younger 19 brother, constantly where is the younger brother, even 20 at home, prefers to play with the younger brother and 21 his friends rather than be with children his own age 22 and older; and this seems to be accepted by everybody.

23 But he's very protective of wanting to play with 24 his younger brother and aware of where he's at, almost 25 to the point of a dependency, which is somewhat odd.

1 You wouldn't expect that from an older brother who 2 typically is off with their own friends and wants very 3 little to do with their younger sibling. That was one 4 thing that I noticed.

5 The other thing that the grandmother talked a 6 little bit about was with Yishai, the younger boy who 7 is seven, beginning to show a temper and some anger, 8 which is new to him. And they're not quite sure where 9 this is coming from, but she's observed that and is 10 aware of that. And Dvir has had some -- the older boy 11 has some aggressive behavior recently in school as well 12 that they're worried about.

13 Q. And why, if at all, is that notable?

14 A. Well, any kind of aggressiveness is notable. You 15 know, an incident of aggression here or there is not 16 unusual; but if it's a pattern of behavior that is 17 sustained and continues, we would want to look at it 18 and explore it further to see where it's coming from, 19 what the source is. We would need ongoing monitoring 20 supervision.

21 Q. And how did they -- did you discuss with the 22 parents or with the children -- excuse me, the 23 Dasbergs, the grandparents, how the children are 24 reacting to their parents' death?

25 A. Yes. We went back -- I wanted to learn a little

1 bit about what happened right at the time of the 2 murders, and --

3 Q. What did you learn about that?

4 A. That overall there was somewhat of an emotional 5 reaction that would have been expected. I mean, these 6 children were 9 months and about 20 months old, and we 7 would expect there to be an emotional reaction. At 8 this age, if you think about it, children, all they 9 know is their parents. Even at 9 months old, babies 10 react more to their parents visually than they do to 11 anybody else, even from birth. They know their parents 12 best of all.

13 And after 9 months old, that's where they feel 14 their security. They reach to their parents, they want 15 their parents and certainly at 20 months old the 16 relationship only deepens. And during this time there 17 are some psychological events that we see, stranger 18 anxieties and separation anxieties, that are normal for 19 all children to go through; but this was the time where 20 their parents were killed and they were separated 21 forever from their parents.

22 There was some crying and distress from the 23 baby, to some extent hard to console for the 24 nine-month-old, for Yishai. It's hard to say exactly 25 what the separation did for these children; but we do

1 know that, even thinking about it, the two people in 2 their lives to provide them with safety and security 3 were taken away. Children don't have the language to 4 express what that's like, but all we know is that that 5 is a trauma. That's a psychic trauma for these 6 children that they have endured and they live with.

7 For the 20-month-old as well it is -- there was 8 a larger connection, a deeper connection with his 9 parents; and how he understands why they're not there 10 is difficult to say and may take time, certainly in the 11 future, to figure out how they're sort of incorporating 12 this event.

13 The other thing that happened was that the older 14 boy, Dvir, became -- at that point, that's when he 15 became very attached to his younger brother, wanted him 16 around, and that didn't surprise me at all. This is 17 what he knew of his nuclear family. That's all that 18 was left of the four of them. So it makes sense to me 19 that even at that young age, he would want something 20 that is familiar and comforting to him around him.

21 Q. Did you learn anything else about the period
22 subsequent to -- immediately following their parents' 23 death?

24 A. Overall it sounds like the children have done quite 25 well in attaching to their grandparents. These are

1 people that they knew, so it wasn't totally foreign.
2 One thing that I did note in talking to the grandmother 3 was how she coped because if she became -- she became 4 the surrogate parent, so to speak. She took an 5 attitude of there will be no sadness, I will not deal 6 with sadness, I will take this event and I will 7 transform it into something positive, a way to keep her 8 daughter's memory alive; and she said her family 9 adopted the same attitude.

10 And we have to commend them for taking on this 11 challenge and this task of raising these children, and 12 in the short term that's a wonderful way to cope. She 13 got through that, she was able to provide these boys -- 14 she wanted to provide the best life for them that she 15 could.

16 On the other hand, I have some serious concerns 17 about that. There has to be sadness. There has to be 18 room for these boys to feel sad that their parents have 19 died and are not there. And in the long term, that 20 could cause some kind of problems in the future for 21 them. If sadness isn't tolerated, if sadness is not 22 allowed, if they're not shown how to handle sadness, 23 that certainly could be a source of problems in the 24 future.

25 Q. What do these children face in the near term?

1 They're now eight and seven. What do they face in sort
2 of the next period of life?

3 A. Well, at each developmental stage, they will have 4 to almost be -- have to deal with their parents' death 5 all over again. As their brains develop and 6 cognitively become more complex and their ability to 7 understand things in a more abstract way and at a 8 deeper level, they will take in this information over 9 and over again.

10 So even now they are asking more questions than 11 they did two years ago or four years ago, and that will 12 continue. At each stage, they will ask questions and 13 be able to understand it more and more and in more 14 depth.

15 Q. What did you learn, if anything, about the 16 questions that they're asking?

17 A. They don't ask a lot. They ask, though, about the 18 information, what happened. They want to know that 19 they've been given -- more recently, Yishai, the 20 younger boy, asked, Is there anything else that I don't 21 know about? You know, Have you told me everything?
22 Which raises -- to me it means, you know, can I trust 23 that you're really providing me with all the 24 information.

25 And, again, at seven years old, he's only

1 capable of handling a certain amount of information.
2 It raises questions for them now and I think in the 3 future about their religious convictions. How could -- 4 if you believe in a God that is all powerful, how could 5 God allow this to happen to them? They're already 6 asking that kind of question. And certainly as they 7 develop their own sense of identity, their own sense of 8 a religious identity, it would not be unreasonable for 9 them to think that -- that's going to be questioned as 10 a result of this act.

11 Q. You discussed the grandparents and this sort of 12 mechanism or method that they have to deal with this 13 loss, the lack of grieving. Does that impact the 14 children right now? Is that causing an impact on the 15 children?

16 A. Not necessarily right now; but, you know, looking 17 down in the future, these children will have to mourn 18 the death of their parents in order to sort of -- they 19 are being brought up -- also, it's important to 20 remember the context that these children are being 21 brought up in.

22 Their parents, as the mother said, they're sort 23 of all around. There are pictures of them around.
24 They've published the books from the mother's drawings, 25 from the comic strips. They're very involved in the 1 works of this mother. So it's not like these parents 2 are sort of not discussed and not talked about. So the 3 issue that their parents have died is constantly there 4 for them. They are growing up with that.

5 And it's also important to remember that, as 6 opposed to when children are older and they have 7 memories of a parent, these children were too young to 8 have any memories from their parents. Any information 9 they have is what's being provided to them by their 10 families, by the grandparents. That's very different 11 because there's almost like an absence or an emptiness 12 as a result of their parents' death.

13 Q. Do they, in fact, have any memories of their 14 parents? I mean, at age 9 months and 20 or 22 months, 15 do they form any memories of their parents?

16 A. No, not at that point. It's more of a sensory 17 piece. They certainly would know their mother's and 18 their father's smell, their father's feel, et cetera;
19 but memories of events, no. The brain isn't developed 20 enough at that age to encode that kind of information.

21 Q. So they, then, would grow up not having any 22 memories of their parents?

23 A. Right, which makes it more difficult to mourn and 24 grieve. When I work with kids who have lost a parent, 25 I create a memory book with them. They bring in

1 pictures. We tell stories. I audio tape them. I 2 write things down for them to create a document that is 3 theirs of their memories. This helps with the 4 bereavement. This helps them to connect with the 5 person who is gone; and it helps, again, the process of 6 grieving.

7 These children don't have that. Anything that 8 they have is from other people's memories. What 9 children do then is create in their minds almost a 10 fantasy of this person who has died, their relationship 11 with this person who has died; and this is something 12 that lasts throughout life because there's an emptiness 13 there that has to be filled, and they can fill it, and 14 there are any number of ways that they can fill it.

15 It's not uncommon for people to make a martyr 16 out of the parent who has died. These happen to be 17 wonderful people, but their children can even make that 18 into something larger than life.

19 Q. Why is that a problem?

20 A. Well, it can be a problem because you can never 21 measure up to it. We are constantly aware of our 22 parents' approval of us, want our parents' approval, 23 want our parents to be proud of us. That is a very 24 natural tendency for people, even grown adults, to want 25 their parents to be pleased with them, to want that

1 approval.

2 When you have a parent who is larger than life, 3 it's almost as if you can never fill that void, you can 4 never be good enough, and that's a lot of pressure to 5 grow up in. They know their mother was a very talented 6 artist, their father was a learned man, a wonderful 7 teacher. They could develop very high expectations of 8 themselves based on what they know of their parents.
9 And, again, growing up with this kind of pressure can 10 be very, very difficult.

11 Q. How is that different if their parents, you know, 12 survived but were very talented? In other words, they 13 grew up in their household. Their father was going to 14 be a teacher and rabbi and their mother an illustrator, 15 a well-known sort of personality.

16 A. Because they would have a relationship with that 17 person who would be able to guide them, to talk with 18 them, to demystify things. Somebody could say, you 19 know, it looks like this, but this is the reality of 20 the situation, and also just to help them out.

21 In the absence of that, kids have magical 22 thinking. They think differently than adults, and they 23 can grow up with these fantasies that can last a 24 lifetime; and that's where it can be very, very 25 difficult for them as they grow up.

1 Q. Is there evidence of that now?

2 A. The only evidence that the grandmother talked about 3 was the similarities between the boys and their 4 parents; that the older boy very much is like his 5 father, more studious, more serious in book learning 6 and the younger one is more of a freer spirit and 7 artistic type. I don't know if the parents -- if the 8 grandparents are sort of pegging them to some extent, 9 that you're like your father, you're like your mother, 10 which also can provide comparisons that could be 11 unrealistic for the boys. That's all that I noticed in 12 seeing them.

13 Q. When you discussed the role of the grandparents or 14 the grandparents' sort of method of reacting to the 15 death, are there things they could do to sort of 16 improve things for the children? In other words, are 17 they part of the problem for these kids in terms of 18 growing up, or are they a plus for the children?

19 A. They're a net plus. They think, again, given the 20 situation, they are doing, number one, the best job 21 that they can and a fine job at bringing these boys up.
22 They have to also deal with their own reactions and 23 grief to this; and any way that helps them to survive 24 it and move on to provide a nurturing home for these 25 boys, you know, can't be really criticized.

1 That doesn't mean there's not room for 2 improvement. Nothing's perfect. Nobody's perfect. So 3 I think they're trying the best they can, but there are 4 certain things that are inevitable in this situation.
5 The fact that these boys will have to mourn their 6 parents, the fact that they have been brought up 7 without a relationship with their parents, the fact 8 that they may long their whole lives to fill this 9 emptiness is inevitable. That can't be filled by 10 anybody.

11 Q. And how is that feeling, how is that going to be 12 manifest, say, in -- when they become adolescents or 13 young adults?

14 A. Well, adolescence is an interesting time of life 15 where you're really developing your sense of self, who 16 you are, your identity, where you come from, what do 17 you believe in, who am I, and it's very much related to 18 your parents, where you're coming from; and although 19 they have grandparents, these are still grandparents 20 raising children.

21 It's not the same as parents, and even the 22 grandmother noted she's spoiling them. She's different 23 in how she's raising them than she is with her own 24 children that she raised.

25 Q. How is that a problem or how does that affect the 1 kids?

2 A. Well, they're not as tight with them. They may not 3 allow them to sort of suffer a little bit. We all -- 4 you know, I have kids. You know, you can't say yes all 5 the time. You have to be able to say no and teach the 6 kid to be able to tolerate that. If the children
7 aren't given a lot of chances to tolerate any painful 8 experiences, then they do grow up in a different way, 9 having expectations, being less self-sufficient, not 10 working as hard.

11 So there could be ramifications in the future as 12 a result of that, and some of this is going to come out 13 during adolescence where they're really going to be 14 beginning to rebel from their homes and trying to 15 become independent. And that's where I see potential 16 for some of the psychological problems, anxieties of 17 going out on their own, becoming independent, where 18 they have been somewhat protected, anxieties of, well, 19 how do I enter into the world when this happened to my 20 parents. You know, that's potential that could happen 21 to me, too.

22 So issues of anxiety are very large here, fear
23 of other deaths, you know, the fear that if it happened
24 once already, and again they're growing up with death
25 all around them in a sense. These parents are ever

1 present in a way. So the fear of losing other people 2 in their life. They are more susceptible and 3 vulnerable to issues of these fears, fears of death,
4 fear of separation from people. So adolescence
5 potentially is a very difficult time for them.

6 Q. What about after adolescence, once they're sort of 7 young adults?

8 A. Again, in the literature, and even in the people
9 that I've treated, difficulties that they experience
10 are really one of forming other relationships, issues
11 of trust, being able to become close with somebody 12 without the fear of them having -- leaving you or 13 abandoning you. That's a fairly common and big issue 14 for young people with an early loss. Again, they're 15 very susceptible to these feelings of fear of somebody 16 leaving them.

17 Q. And do these feelings and this anxiety that you
18 mentioned, do these kinds of feelings and issues 19 dissipate over time, or will they remain with these 20 children for the rest of their lives?

21 A. It's hard to exactly say now what will happen. I 22 believe that they will have to deal with all of these 23 issues at some point in their lifetime. The magnitude 24 and the intensity is very hard to say. The fact that 25 they will have to struggle with these issues to me is a

1 given. That's just part of who they are, part of how 2 they've developed as a result of their parents' being 3 murdered at such a young age and this loss in their 4 life. That they will have to do.

5 They will have to, again, go through a mourning
6 period at different parts in their life. It is not 7 uncommon at each milestone in a person's life, when 8 they finish high school, when they start a university, 9 when they graduate, when they get married, it brings up 10 losses. It's bittersweet. It's great that these 11 things are happening, but it would have been nice had 12 my parents been there. What would my parents have been 13 like? What advice would my parents give me in these 14 circumstances? And they won't have that. So that at 15 each point they will have to suffer the loss all over 16 again.

17 Q. What will the loss -- ultimately the loss of their 18 grandparents, you know, who are raising them, how will 19 that impact them?

20 A. I would think pretty significantly because it 21 catapults them into being orphaned a second time by the 22 people who basically raised them, at a much younger 23 age; that they're being raised by a generation older 24 than their parents, and they will die sooner. That's a 25 given. And, again, any loss -- previous losses sort of 1 are compounded by the earlier ones.

2 So that potentially could be an incredibly 3 difficult time for them, you know, feelings of being 4 alone in the world. You know, this is all they had, 5 and now they're gone; and chances are these boys are 6 going to be quite young when that happens. A lot of 7 this, again, left untreated or at its worst can be some 8 serious depression where there's a sense of 9 hopelessness and loneliness and sadness. At the 10 extreme end is suicide, which happens, but, you know, 11 that is an extreme, to anxiety disorders,
12 post-traumatic stress disorder.

13 It is not inconceivable that at some point in 14 their lives they will hear about these murders from the 15 outside, not necessarily from their families. They can 16 read about it. Pictures are available. In order -- it 17 is possible that kids become traumatized again even 18 hearing about the information in the future. You don't 19 have to be at the event to suffer a stress disorder.
20 So they are susceptible to that in the future as well 21 just by gathering information about what happened; and, 22 again, during adolescence, young adulthood, that's when 23 people think about, Well, where did I come from? Who 24 were these people? And their own investigations about 25 what happened could lead to them being traumatized all

1 over again.

2 Q. I just wanted to go back for one second. The 3 actual trauma or potential trauma of actually being in 4 that car for Yishai, is there any evidence that he 5 suffered any particularized trauma that sort of affects 6 him?

7 A. There's no outward evidence. A lot of this is 8 invisible, you know, and it also depends on the way you 9 understand child development. If you think about this 10 child having heard the gunshots, crying, startle
11 response, which most likely happened, crying as a 12 result without their primary caretaker responding, on a 13 sensory level, that's a trauma. How long he was in the 14 car before somebody found them is unknown. It might 15 have been hours and hours.

16 Then the, again, ripping away the parents, who 17 are the main source of safety and security for these 18 children, even at nine months old is a trauma. How 19 that encodes in the brain, we don't exactly know; but 20 the fact that it was a trauma to him, that he 21 experienced that is true, making him susceptible and 22 vulnerable to some psychological problems in the 23 future.

24 Q. And is that, then, basically your conclusion as to 25 how this loss affects these children? In other words,

1 you've told us that they seem to be doing pretty good 2 now, pretty well?

3 A. Yes.

4 Q. And they are subject to some issues in terms of 5 their behavior but nothing that is clinical or has --

6 A. Right.

7 Q. -- immediate ramifications?

8 A. Exactly.

9 Q. Or immediate implications; is that right?

10 A. Right.

11 Q. Is what, then, you're telling us that these 12 children are at risk for these kinds of sufferings down 13 the road?

14 A. Absolutely.

15 Q. And can you discuss what that means because I just 16 want to be clear for the Court in terms of we're not -- 17 you're not saying, from what I understand, that right 18 now these kids are debilitated. You don't know that 19 they will be debilitated, but you know that they're at 20 risk. What does that mean?

21 A. Right. All I can say now is that they are 22 different than their peers. They are being brought up 23 by their grandparents because their parents were 24 murdered. That's not a typical case scenario, and 25 their friends are aware of that and the community is

1 aware of that. So they are being brought up somewhat 2 differently than a regular child, an average child.

3 But yes, the ramifications of this are a lot in 4 the future, but they are susceptible to deal with 5 issues of depression and anxiety and post-traumatic 6 stress disorder as a result of this in the future.
7 They will have a lot of issues to sort of work through 8 in their lifetime as a result.

9 Q. Is there any way to know if these issues are going 10 to manifest themselves to the extent that they will 11 need intensive treatment or counselling or suffer any 12 of the sort of particularized types of manifestations 13 that you referenced before?

14 A. There's no way to -- I can't say yes or no. I
15 wouldn't -- you know, again, given these situations, I 16 wouldn't be surprised given the adults that I've 17 treated where there's been a significant loss in the 18 past, I wouldn't be surprised if, yes, at some point in 19 their lifetime they would need some kind of 20 psychotherapy to help them cope with the feelings that 21 come up.

22 It also depends on their personalities.
23 Everybody responds differently, even to these 24 situations where death -- they've grown up, again, with 25 death. Some people respond by it limits them. They

1 sort of become a viewer of life because of that sadness
2 and emptiness. They don't participate as fully because 3 of that depression. Other people become risk-takers, 4 and they almost defy death. You can't get me. And 5 those are the ones jumping out -- the James Dean types
6 who take risks and almost defy it. You can't get me.
7 You got my parents. You're not going to get me. That 8 puts people at certain risks as well.

9 So, again, it's hard to determine exactly how 10 these boys are going to respond in the future, but all 11 I know is they have a huge psychological and emotional 12 battle to deal with in their lifetime as a result.

13 MR. STRACHMAN: Thank you.

14 THE COURT: You may step down, Doctor. Thank 15 you.

16 MR. STRACHMAN: Your Honor, I would just like at 17 this point, if I could, to introduce some remaining 18 exhibits. We have provided to the Court an original 19 and a copy of the notice to the Defendants that we 20 provided on June 25, 2002, of this hearing. I'd like 21 that to be made part of the record that they were 22 particularly notified of this hearing. We also have --

23 THE COURT: We'll do that. Has it been 24 designated?

25 MR. STRACHMAN: Yes, your Honor. That's
